Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 1400 on Thursday 30 Dec 2021

UK Outlook for Tuesday 4 Jan 2022 to Thursday 13 Jan 2022:
Temperatures are expected to fall to around or slightly below average early next week with overnight frost becoming more widespread for a time. Some wintry showers with snow to fairly low levels is possible in the north with cloud and rain clearing to drier and brighter conditions further south. This regime is likely to be short-lived though as a return to a milder, unsettled pattern with Atlantic weather systems moving across the country is expected through the second half of next week onwards. This will likely bring spells of rain, occasional snow to hills in the north, accompanied by strong winds at times. Overall, temperatures are expected to be above average, although some temporary colder periods are likely.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.